MASARYK UNIVERSITY

Masaryk University in Brno is the second oldest university in the Czech Republic and the premier university in Moravia. Founded in 1919, only three months after the creation of the Czechoslovak Republic itself, it was named after T. G. Masaryk, the first President of Czechoslovakia. Today Masaryk University comprises nine faculties with more than 150 departments, institutes and clinics covering a broad range of academic disciplines and fields of research. The buildings of the university are concentrated close to Brno's historic old city centre. More than 44,000 students, approximately 38,000 from the Czech Republic and about 6,000 from Europe and the rest of the world - over 60 countries in all - study at the university, making it the country's second largest higher education institution. The opening of three-year Bachelor's and two-year Master's programs of study has widened access for those wishing to study at the university, while the recent introduction of the European Credit Transfer System (ECTS) has helped to foster the internationalisation of curricula within a European context and to attract growing numbers of international students.

THE FACULTY OF LAW - PAST AND PRESENT

The Faculty of Law of Masaryk University is one of the Czech Republic's top law schools. Its tradition goes back to the very establishment of Masaryk University in 1919: at the beginning it had two faculties, and the Faculty of Law was one of them. The Faculty soon became famous as a centre for the normative theory of law promoted by Hans Kelsen. The leading personalities of the time were Professors František Weyr and Karel Engliš - the latter was the first Rector of Masaryk University, finance minister in several cabinets and governor of the central bank between the two world wars. The successful era came to an abrupt end when the faculty was closed down by the Nazis in 1939. Immediately after World War II it was reopened but closed down again after five years for political reasons, this time by the Communist rulers of the country. Only the more relaxed political climate of the late 1960s made a fresh start possible: the faculty reopened in 1969.

Since then, the faculty has managed to resume its original place in the system of legal education in the Czech Republic. The city of Brno, which after the collapse of the Communist regime in 1989 was restored to its pre-war standing as the legal centre of the country, creates an environment especially friendly to law studies. The Supreme and the Constitutional Courts of the Czech Republic, the Supreme Administrative Court of the Czech Republic, the Chief Public Prosecutor's and Ombudsman's offices are all based here, and the many contacts between the faculty and top judicial bodies and other legal authorities have a positive impact on the quality of education.

The faculty prepares its students for a wide range of legal professions and for careers in state and public administration, industry and commerce, as well as for academic careers. It has an enrolment of over 3.600 students.

DEPARTMENTS

The faculty's teaching staff of 99, among them 39 Professors and Associate Professors, are divided into the following thirteen departments:

- Legal Theory
- The History of the State and Law
- Constitutional Law and Political Science
- Civil Law
- Commercial Law
- Labour Law and Social Security Law
- Environmental Law and Land Law
- Administrative Studies and Administrative Law
- Criminal Law
- International and European Law
- Financial Law and Economics
- Institute of Law and Technology
- Institute of Legal Skills and Innovation of Studies

The non-academic staff of 57 provide organizational, administrative and technical support for the faculty's operations.

DEGREE PROGRAMS

Three degree programs of study are offered. The Master's program in Law and Legal Science, the principal program of the Faculty, is a five year full-time course ending in a Mgr. degree.

The Bachelor's program in Legal Specializations lasts three years part-time and leads to a Bc. degree.

Finally, there is the postgraduate doctoral program in theoretical legal sciences, lasting four years full-time or part-time and ending in the Ph.D. degree.

Law and Legal Science - Type of degree programme: Master's degree programme, standard length of study 5 years, degree conferred: Mgr. The Master's degree program provides qualifications required for practising law in all legal careers. Graduates are fully qualified lawyers. The program consists of ten semesters. The focus in the opening semesters is on legal philosophy and history, Roman law, theory of law and the state, constitutional law and political science. The following semesters are devoted mainly to private law subjects such as civil law, civil procedure, commercial law, labour law, international private law and international trade transactions, family law and intellectual property law. The last part of the study focuses above all on public law subjects, such as penal law, administrative law and tax law, international public law, EC law and environmental law. The program is concluded with a Mgr. dissertation and a state examination.

Public Policy (Public Administration) - Type of degree programme: Master's degree programme, combined form, standard length of study 2 years, degree conferred: Mgr.

Legal Specializations - Type of degree programme: Bachelor's degree programme, standard length of study 3 years, degree conferred: Bc. The Bachelor's degree program is designed for practitioners in public administration, social work, the police, trade and industry, and other related fields, secondary school graduates or non-law degree holders who wish to increase their knowledge and obtain qualifications in specific areas of law to enhance their career opportunities and advancement. The specializations include Legal Questions of Land Register, International Commercial and Banking Law, Law and Business, Social Security Law, Theory and Practice of Criminal Procedure, Public Administration, Commercial Law, Law and Finance, Senior Officer of Justice.

Theoretical Legal Sciences (4-years)- Type of degree programme: doctoral degree programme, standard length of study 4 years, degree conferred: Ph.D. The Ph.D. Program is designed for law graduates with a Mgr.degree wishing to pursue academic or research careers. The following courses can be taken: History of the State and Law, Roman Law, Theory of Law, Constitutional Law and Theory of the State, Public International Law, Private International Law, EC Law, Civil Law, Commercial Law, Labour Law, Administrative Law, Financial Law, Criminal Law, and Environmental Law.

All degree programs are taught in Czech. Some specialized courses within the Master's program are also offered in English, French or German. They have been selected so as to give international students fundamental knowledge of the political system and the system of law in the Czech Republic. Some issues of international and EC law and general theory of law have also been included. Altogether there are at the moment forty six courses taught in foreign languages (27 courses with the SOC codes and 19 courses with the MVV codes). For details, see the next section, Courses for International Students.

COURSES FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

Instruction

Courses are part of the Faculty Master's program in Law and Jurisprudence. Most of them are taught in English, some in French and German. All are one-semester courses; some are scheduled for the autumn semester, some for the spring semester, and some for both.

Lectures (with the codes SOC) are held for a minimum of two students. If there are smaller numbers of students wishing to attend a course the course will not be open and the students are kindly invited to take part in any other running courses.

The reading list for each course is given by the course coordinator at the first lecture or tutorial.

The courses with the codes SOC are primarily for students studying at the faculty within the Erasmus exchange programme but they are available to other international students if there are Erasmus students enrolled on the course.

The courses with the codes MVV are for students on the Law Master programme and are open to other students if there are places available and/or if the teacher gives his/her approval.

The interactive list of all Courses in Foreign Languages can be found at the faculty web site:

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

Students wishing to spend some part of their study time studying at the university abroad have an extremely wide range of possibilities to choose from – semester or year-long study stays within the framework of various European and non-European mobility programmes, but the mobility under the Erasmus Exchange programme is still the most popular with our students. The Faculty of Law has well-established contacts with many international law schools, however the faculty is always interested in discussing further opportunities for cooperation with law schools and law faculties abroad.

For the academic year 2011/2012, the ERASMUS student mobility partners of the Faculty of Law are the following institutions:
